

After Tracy McAlpine writes a popular play, she has the financial wherewithal to do whatever she wants, and what she wants to do is win Scrabble tournaments and Spelling Bees. In order to learn the words she needs to know to excel at these activities, she needs to learn over 100,000 words. Because she learns words by reading them over and over again, she decides to write a series of books - 26 of them - each one of them dealing with a single letter of the alphabet. In order to be able to read each book over and over again, she writes them as fiction, involving an exciting plot of industrial espionage and romance. If you're studying for Scrabble or Spelling Bee purposes, you too will enjoy these books. CAROLINE MINISCULE is also the author of the aviation book The Lady and the Tiger...Moth, and two science fiction novels, The Coldest Equations: The People Out There and The Coldest Equations: The Labyrinth Makers.
