

The 30s are roaring. It's a time in women's lives for breaking personal and professional barriers. But try Googling "successful women in their 30s," and you'll be served up articles like these: "Why Are Women In Their 30s Still Single?" "Are Professional Women In Their Mid-30s Too Independent?" "Why Women Lose The Dating Game" Denise Restauri, the founder and CEO of Girlquake and the executive producer of the inaugural Forbes Women's Summit, knows that women are doing so much more than looking for a date in their 30s, and yet the media largely ignores their trials and triumphs. Their Roaring Thirties: Brutally Honest Career Talk From Women Who Beat The Youth Trap spotlights thirtysomething women who have an inner fire that has powered them through sudden changes, sick parents, workplace sexism, startup stresses, baby questions and much more. Candid, illuminating interviews with female executives, professors, lawyers and entrepreneurs provide a vital perspective on the many challenges these women face, along with what drives them to succeed. Their Roaring Thirties is sparking a new conversation to help millennials make sense of what's to come and show Baby Boomers what drives the women building tomorrow's great companies.
